

Composition

English, composition, writing what ever you want to call it, I was never really good at it or I just didn't fell confident in it. But I guess in high school the non-English class that I have taken did have text in them, such as math, graphic design, art and web design. But a substitute teacher told me that "math is composition, where in math there are symbols that make us work the equation, but for compositions it's structure. And that algebra was created when math and English go together and had a baby." So in my mind I thought math was my strongest point and English being the weakest, but on test scores its the opposite. When this happens
